We are gratified to hear the general approbation expressed, on the interesting occasion, of the late annual commencement of St. John's college. The hall and galleries were crowded. The Governor, the Council, the Senate, and Members of the House of Representatives, and many distinguished citizens of the State were present. The meritorious exertions of the graduates were also honoured by a numerous assemblage of ladies, whose polite attention rewarded the efforts of learning and genius.

These young gentlemen had, preparatory to graduation, undergone an examination of several days continuance, in presence of the Visitors and Governors of the institution and other gentlemen of intelligence. From those, in whose judgment we can confide, we have understood, that they evinced a thorough acquaintance, with the ancient, and some modern languages, and the different scientific studies pursued in the college.
